Coordination as Unintended Benefit: Lab-in-the-Field Evidence from a Conditional Cash Transfer Program (Job Market Paper).

This study tests an unintended benefit of a Conditional cash transfer program in Colombia: an improvement in coordination among its beneficiaries. A sample of 714 beneficiaries participate in a minimum effort coordination game. Those enrolled in the program for over a year are not just coordinating; they are more likely to exert the highest level of effort and reach higher earnings. Collected data is sufficiently rich to establish that improvement in coordination is not due to potential confounding factor such as willingness to cooperate, connectivity or socio-economic characteristics. Participants are required to interact with local program officials, community leaders and fellow beneficiaries. This social component of the CCT, changed beliefs about others' behavior and established a social norm, which allowed beneficiaries to overcome coordination failures. The findings support nascent initiatives to influence beliefs through policy interventions.

Prosocial behavior, Heterogeneity and Incentives: Experimental Evidence from the local commons in Colombia. I examine the efficiency of incentives by estimating a structural model of social preferences. The paper studies the role of the composition of preference types in the groups with 1095 participants.

Work pays: different benefits of a workfare program in Colombia. With Orazio Attanasio, Costas Meguir (Yale University), Marcos Vera-Hernandez (UCL) and Arthur Alik (University of Toulouse). We examine the effects of a workfare program in Colombia. We find that the program increased individual labor income and labor supply. The effect of the program persisted beyond its operation in rural areas.

Identification of Other-Regarding Preferences: Evidence from a Common Pool Resource Game in Colombia. With David Echeverry (University of California Berkeley). We identify individuals' types by using a structural latent class model and compare the results with the structural parameters estimated from a Quantal Response Equilibrium model.

Motivating Teamwork in Organizations: Lab-in-the-Field Evidence on Cooperation and Social Recognition. This economic field experiment tests the effects of public and private recognition on voluntary contributions to a public good within an organization. Using a within-subjects design, 410 Colombian employees participated in an online public goods game. The analysis reveals that public recognition has a sizeable effect on contributions, while private recognition has a small effect.

Leading by non-example: do leader's social preferences matter for cooperation? Experimental evidence from Colombia. In 2014, I conducted an artefactual field experiment with 500 beneficiaries of a CCT in Colombia and examined whether how powerful leaders are determines their decision to free ride and the relationship between individual willingness to cooperate and the presence of an empowered leader in the group.

Are Public Officials Less Pro-Social? An Artefactual Field Experiment in Colombia. With Natalia Candelo, Juan Camilo Cárdenas, Alejandro Gaviria. We designed and implemented economic experiments on social preferences to measure discrimination in the provision of social services to the poor.
